An Open Letter To All Potential Commercial Driving Candidates

RE: Ontario Truck Driving School

427 Exeter Road

London, Ontario, N6E 2Z3

Since the mid 1980's Ludwig Transport Limited has been interviewing and hiring graduates from truck driving schools. Although mostly from schools in southern Ontario, we have also ventured further to find candidates that were sufficiently trained to take on the tasks required by a commercial transport driver.

There are very few schools that will actually completely prepare a novice driver for the career choice he or she has made. So much so that graduates require very little, if any at all, additional training by our own compliment of driver-mentors. Ontario Truck Driving School is, by far, the leader of this very select group of schools.

Graduates from the Ontario Truck Driving School require an additional two to four weeks of mentoring, mostly in job-specific processes, applications, and company orientation, before they become fully productive in the industry. As a graduate of the Ontario Truck Driving School, we are already assured of the candidate's ability to operate a class 8 tractor-trailer safely and efficiently.

It has been our experience that graduates from lesser schools, sometimes referred to as license mills, require at least an additional three to six months of direct supervision before they can be counted on to operate a class 8 tractor-trailer in a safe and efficient manner, after which they must go on to learn, and master, job specific processes and applications.

We are so certain of Ontario Truck Driving School's curriculum and success that we have appointed them as our house training partner. Qualified candidates, who don't meet government assistance requirements, and who are serious about a career change, are trained by Ontario Truck Driving School. The cost of the training is fronted by, and the candidate is paid to learn by, Ludwig Transport Limited.

My advice, to anyone wanting to make a career change, and looking for a responsible, reliable, and reputable training company, cannot go wrong in choosing Ontario Truck Driving School.

Ludwig Transport Limited,

Michael A. Ludwig,

Operations Manager.
